Tagging Art History: Crowdsourcing Murals with the CSRC

Friday, April 18, 2014

<http://www.metadatagames.org/#games>

Roberto Chavez, "Porques se Pelan?"

Mural formerly located at Eastern and Floral avenues, East Los Angeles (1972)

Fire up your computers and mobile devices for a day of online gaming that will enhance global access to CSRC's digital library collections! The CSRC has partnered with Tiltfactor, a game research lab at Dartmouth College, and contributed over 600 images from the Nancy Tovar Collection of East L.A. Murals to the Lab's newest project, Metadata Games: <http://www.metadatagames.org/#games>.

Metadata Games is a fun, addictive platform for collecting descriptive metadata for digitized, archival material. The Nancy Tovar Collection of East L.A. Murals will debut as the featured collection on the Metadata Games site for 24 hours starting Friday, April 18, 12:01 a.m. (PST). The collection contains a broad selection of material in a variety of urban settings sure to appeal to a wide range of viewers. So jump on, play the games, and contribute your own unique tags to each image you see! The more people who tag, the more accessible this remarkable photographic collection will become!
