S.A. filmmaker Gutierrez’s ‘Please, Don’t Bury Me Alive!’ inducted into National Film Registry

San Antonio's Home Page

Home Local US & World Business Sports Food Entertainment Lifestyle Opinion Cars Jobs Homes

Weekender 24/7

News and views from the Express-News' arts and entertainment writers.

Books Museums Music Theater TV Visual art

S.A. filmmaker Gutierrez’s ‘Please, Don’t Bury Me Alive!’ inducted into National Film Registry

Posted on December 17, 2014 | BY HECTOR SALDAÑA

S A N A N T O N I O – The Library of Congress announced Wednesday that pioneering independent Chicano filmmaker Efrain Gutierrez’s 1976 film “Please, Don’t Bury Me Alive!” was inducted into the National Film Registry.

It joins 24 other films inducted this year, including Stephen Spielberg’s “Saving Private Ryan” and John Hughes’ “Ferris Bueller’s Day Off” as worthy of film preservation.

Gutierrez’s best films – “Please, Don’t Bury Me Alive!” “Run Tecato Run,” “Chicano Love Is Forever/Amor Chicano Es Para Siempre” and “El Juicio” – revealed the gritty realism of the barrio, a world of junkies, hustlers and Chicano thug life.

“Please Don’t Bury Me Alive” is cherished for its historical significance. It is considered the first Chicano indie film.

“It’s quite an honor,” said Gutierrez, 58, who was born in S.A. and graduated from Edgewood High School. “I knew that it was something. But I didn’t know how big of a ‘big deal’ it was. It’s starting to kind of sink in.”

UCLA professor and film historian Chon Noriega has been Gutierrez’s loudest (and often the only) champion of his early work. He once described the renegade Chicano filmmaker as “one of the least likely, most bewildering figures of the celluloid era.”

Gutierrez credited Noriega, who nominated the film for the prestigious honor.

“I have to give him all the credit,” said Gutierrez, who learned about the announcement late last week.

These days Gutierrez, with his wife, Irma, and son, Efrain-Abran, operate the Efrain Gutierrez Taller de Cine, Arte, Musica y Comida at the corner of South Flores Street and West Glenn Avenue. The cultural community arts center opened earlier this year. Gutierrez's film is available for sale there.

Gutierrez, whose surviving film prints are part of UCLA’s massive film collection and scripts and printed materials are at Stanford University, said the last remaining Holy Grail is finding (and then restoring) the 16mm film footage and Nagra reel-to-reel audio tapes of his “La Revolucion Chicana” concert, the doomed so-called Chicano Woodstock staged on a South Side farm on Sept. 16, 1977.

hsaldana@express-news.net

Categories: Movies
Tags: Chon Noriega | Efrain Gutierrez | Library of Congress | National Film Registry | Please Don’t Bury Me Alive

About the Author

HECTOR SALDAÑA

You Might Also Like

Wait Till You See What Taylor Swift’s House Looks Like
Lonny Magazine

15 Celeb Moms Hotter Than Their Daughters
Styleblazer

Fresh Classic: The Timeless White Shirt
Barneys New York

What 22 Female Celebs Really Weigh
Topix

From Around the Web

- Alexandria Morgan's Instagram Pictures (Which Are Not Banned ... For Now)
  (ThePostGame)
- America’s Most Beautiful Landscapes You Need To See For Yourself
  (The North Face)
- Photos of Brad Pitt That Would Make Angelina Blush
  (Details.com)
- You Won’t Believe These Celebrities Never Went To College, Especially Number 6
  (Interesticle)
- Oops! Kate Upton's Wardrobe Malfunction in GQ Shoot (GQ)
- 15 Celebs Posing Without Photoshop

We Recommend

- S.A. radio legend dead at 93
- Mark your calendars: ‘Performance Party’ is a go
- Clark High School teacher resigns after admitting to sexual relationship with student
- WOAI radio cuts! News vet among casualties
- Ouch! Was the Spurs Coyote a pain — literally?
- Another S.A. radio vet history at KZEP
- Jagoda, longtime supporter of Texas musicians, dies