Assistant Professor of Sociology, Cal Poly Pomona

Thursday, May 15, 2014

3:00 – 5:00 p.m.

CSRC Library – 144 Haines Hall

Free; no RSVP required

In large metropolitan areas in California, Latinos and Asians collectively constitute the majority, a demographic shift that is reshaping the way children of immigrants are racially incorporated into American society. To date, race scholars treat Latinos and Asians as two distinct panethnic categories. This lecture examines how Filipino Americans, the largest Asian group in the state, disrupt this conventional divide and negotiate their racial identity within an emerging Latino-Asian racial spectrum, and how the cultural residuals of Spanish and U.S. colonialism affect how Filipinos racially position themselves vis-à-vis Latinos and Asians, the two fastest growing panethnic groups in the country. These findings have implications for better understanding how the racialization process is evolving as the United States moves beyond a black-white racial paradigm.

Co-sponsored by the UCLA Asian American Studies Research Center, UCLA Asian American Studies Department, UCLA Department of Sociology, UCLA Program on International Migration, UCLA Department of Sociology Race/Ethnicity Working Group, UCLA César E. Chávez Department of Chicana and Chicano Studies, and the UCLA Chicano Studies Research Center
