

Wednesday, February 20, 2013

Ramiro Gomez Jr. Art Show

Ramiro Gomez Jr. is opening a solo art show today at the UCLA Chicano Studies Center.

Ramiro's work focuses on bringing attention to the unsung laborers who work to make sure that society functions so smoothly. These workers are typically ignored, but Ramiro's life size cut outs call attention to the noble, albeit unheralded, professions.

The show opens this evening from 4-6 on the main campus at UCLA.

Labels: Ramiro Gomez Jr., street art

Recommend this on Google

Posted by

Melrose+Fairfax at 5:55 AM

No comments:

Post a Comment

Comment as: Select profile...

Livin' in LA - Vacation in LA

Search This Blog

Popular Posts

Chod's Rebuttal to Annie Preece

The plot has thickened. In response to having her painting purchased, and then painted over, and then returned to the streets, it turn...

MELROSEandFAIRFAX on The Huffington Post

MELROSEandFAIRFAX just had a collaboration with The Huffington Post where we break down the differences between Street Art and Graffiti. ...

Chod Caps Gallery Canvas from Annie Preece - and Returns it To the Streets

The history of this piece is absolutely fascinating, and is like nothing that has done before. It all began when Chod went to a local ...

Your Favorite Add

Stickers from Favorite ADD getting stuck up on Melrose.

Plastic Jesus Gets Up in London

Plastic Jesus has made a name on the streets of LA with clever art pieces aimed at contemporary events. And Plastic Jesus just went...

LA's Official Street Art District is Melrose and Fairfax

The area of Melrose and Fairfax has long been